Microsoft should have to give a monetary penalty to underprivileged schools. This may be cash or it may be competitor's computers or products. It should not be their own products. Otherwise, this would be "forcing" them to enlarge their market share at the expense of their small competitors. I thought the whole point of the initial legal action was to open up the market place to fair competition and halt or decrease Microsoft's predatory ways. This unfortunately will probably do nothing to actually hurt their de facto monopoly as they have approximately $36 billion in cash and short term securities.
